Being unfamiliar with Russian cuisine, we decided to give Borshch N Tears a try, after a friend recommended it. Our server was very patient and explained the dishes, as well as the various beer selection. Unable to decide the great selection, we settled on sharing 2 mains and a dessert. The beef/pork dumplings were very tasty and not too 'doughy' and the cabbage rolls were small and compact but punched a flavour. O... read more. We booked a table on Saturday evening although there was no one in the place. We had a plate of borsh and mushroom soup (about £15 each), and even with added bread I was hungry after as the portion was small. There was a musician singing very outdated songs of 70s, 80s. The experience was disappointing and odd. read more.
